Fyodor Dostoevsky : The Gambler before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Gambler:

Dostoyevsky's writing style and prose are second to none, and I attribute some this to the superb translation of his books. This one is no exception. He always plays to the apparent Russian inferiority complex vis a vis other Europeans of his era. I do not wish to give away any of the plot elements, as it may spoil the experince for the teader. This novel is a relatively quick read, and it has an abrupt, unanticipated ending.
